In the meantime W. E. Bankhard, the purchasing agent, had been busy. He went out and bought every desk in Baltimore suitable for railroad work. Thus by noon there were desks enough. Thirty-five hundred desks were burned in the fire. With them went 3,000 type-writers, and while the desks were being bought, the real estate agent of the company, J. D. McCubbin, hunted up agents of typewriters and bought all that could be obtained in Baltimore.
